Again at Johnstown.

Governor Beaver and the Relief Commission

VISIT THE DEVASTATED CITY.

They Take a Tour of Inspection and Hold a Conference With the Business Men. Where the Million Dollars Will Be Spent—Fears of a Strike Among the Workingmen.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 20.—Governor Beaver accompanied by the members of the relief commission arrived here about 11 o'clock yesterday morning. On reaching general headquarters the party mounted horses and proceeded on a tour of inspection which lasted until after 1 o'clock in the afternoon. The governor expressed gratification at the progress made.

The eastern members of the commission were appalled at the character and extent of the devastation, of which they had formed no adequate idea, and expressed themselves in no uncertain language concerning the exigencies and needs of the place. After the inspection the commission met in consultation with the business men of Johnstown in Alma hall. The party left on a special train over the Pennsylvania railroad for Pittsburg at 8 o'clock in the afternoon.

At the conference, which lasted about three hours, the Pittsburg members of the commission wanted the $1,000,000 loan expended upon measures of solid relief for Johnstown, while the eastern members were of the opinion that the Susquehanna and Juniatta valley sufferers were also entitled to recognition. After a great deal of talk Governor Beaver decided that Johnstown should have 75 or 80 per cent of the $1,000,000.

The next question was how the money should be distributed. Houses were conceded the first want of the people, and 500 Chicago ready-made houses will be put up and furnished as soon as they can be got upon the ground.

It was decided to use every means possible to make the stricken people of the community self-supporting and induce them to get to work as soon as possible.

A resolution was passed that all the money in sight, all the money raised and that which will be raised will not be sufficient to meet the wants of the sufferers in the flooded valley.

The commission elected Governor Beaver chairman and R. S. Stevens, of Philadelphia, secretary. The commissioners and all praised Gen. Hastings' services in the Conemaugh valley in this great emergency.

Governor Beaver and his party called on Miss Clara Barton, the president of the Red Cross society, and each gentleman was presented separate. The governor congratulated Miss Barton on her good work. Governor Beaver has refused to relieve the Fourteenth regiment and will continue it another week, when it is expected the military will be called off altogether then.

A Bank Goes Into Liquidation.

J. D. Roberts, surviving partner of John Diebert & Company, bankers, is out in a card announcing that owing to the death of both his partners he has concluded to go into liquidation. He says 3% per cent. will be paid to depositors within thirty days. 3% per cent. within six months and the remainder within a year. The bank is solvent, and its securities good.

Reporters in Danger.

A blast from one of the gorges yesterday threw a huge stone high in the air over the press tent at Gen. Hastings' headquarters, falling through the canvas, narrowly missing one or two reporters who were writing at a table in the tent. This is but one of the narrow escapes daily.

Fears of a Strike.

An attempt last night to reduce the wages to a basis of uniformity on the part of the contractors met with a general threat to strike by the workmen. Some of the men who have been working in the drifts have been getting a day and a half's pay for a day's work, and all classes of workmen have been paying a half dollar a day board and they are also murmuring on this account or rather because of the quality of their food and this emphasized their threat. Gen. Hasting told them he had nothing to do with the wage question and they left murmuring. Laborers are very plentiful and if there is a strike others will replace the strikers.

Sent to the Asylum.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 20.—Phineas Joyce, who went to Johnstown to see the sights and was made crazy, has been sent to the Danville asylum.

Kentucky Chautauqua Assembly.

LEXINGTON, Ky., June 20.—The Kentucky Chautauqua assembly will open its third encampment in Woodland Park, this city, Tuesday, June 25, and continue for eleven days. Among the noted lecturers and speakers engaged are B. H. Cromwell, George R. Wendling, C. E. Bolton, R. S. Holmes, Leon H. Vincent, J. B. De Motte, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, Right Rev. T. U. Dudley, J. M. Hawes, Dean A. A. Wright, Miss Anna De Bosset, A. L. Peterman, and for the Fourth of July the great orator Daniel Dougherty, one of the greatest of American speakers.

Three Years for Embezzlement.

BOSTON, June 20.—W. H. Derby, former cashier of the Mutual District Messenger company, was yesterday sentenced to three years' imprisonment for embezzlement.

Died of Chagres Fever.

NEW YORK, June 20.—Augusta Calderon, aged 10 years, who arrived with her parents on the Colon, died Monday in this city of chagres fever.

WOULD NOT ENFORCE THE LAW.

"Dynamite" Dusy Locked Up in Jail for Contempt of Court.

CHICAGO, June 20.—John P. Dusy, better known as "Dynamite" Dusy, one of the most pronounced Anarchists in the city, was sent to jail yesterday for contempt of court by Judge Williamson. He was on the regular panel of jurors, and was first called for the trial of a robbery case on last Monday. When jurors were impaneled Dusy told Judge Williamson that he would not find any one guilty if he served on a jury, and the latter declared that he would keep him two weeks anyway. Yesterday, when Dusy had been summoned to answer truthfully all questions asked concerning his competency to serve in a jury, the assistant state's attorney inquired:

"Mr. Dusy, will you enforce the law if selected to serve on this jury?"

"No, sir."

"Why will you not?"

"Because I don't believe in convicting people. I believe in preventing crime."

"How would you keep men from robbing other men?"

"I would see that they had what money they needed without having to steal it."

"Do you mean to say that you would not convict this prisoner if robbery were proven?"

"I would not like to."

"Then I'll excuse you."

Judge Williamson, who had been listening intently, spoke up:

"Do I understand you to say that you will not enforce law if sworn in as a juryman?"

"That is what I said."

"Well, Mr. Dusy, I'll just send you to the county jail for the night. Take charge of him Mr. Bailiff."

When Dusy reached his cell he uplifted his hands and dramatically exclaimed. "Here am I, a martyr to my opinion. In yonder cells suffered long months five of my comrades, and they, too, were martyrs to their opinions. Four of them swung from the gallows; one escaped only by sacrificing his life. Yet this they call the land of liberty, of the brave and free."

LOST AT SEA.

All Hope Abandoned For the Safety of a Schooner and a Brig.

BALTIMORE, June 20.—All hope for the safety of the masters and crews of the Baltimore schooner Brooxne Belle Rakes, and the Providence brig Rachel Coney. The Rakes sailed from Fernandina, Fla., for Baltimore April 2 with lumber. It is supposed she was run down by some large vessel during the gale of April 7, while others think she and the brig Rachel Coney were in collision, as the latter must have been off the coast on her way from Trinidad to Washington.

The captain of the Brooxne Belle Rakes was Capt W. K. Tull, of Baltimore, with Samuel W. Wilson, cook and steward, and Seamen C. Anderson, of Sweden; A. Elinson and Andrew Olsen, of Norway; Charles Rosenthal, of Germany. The brig Rachel Coney was commanded by Capt Charles Basham, of Baltimore; E. J. Felloe, of Baltimore, was mate; Frank McNeal, of North Carolina, was cook and steward. James Fenegan, boatswain. The seamen were A. Peterson, of Sweden; Harry Hood, of Germany; Al. Olsen, of Norway, and C. A. Langgren, of Sweden.

STRIKE FOR EIGHT HOURS.

Over Two Hundred Brickmakers Go Out at Chicago.

CHICAGO, June 20.—Two hundred brickmakers employed in the brick yards of Purington & Kimball and Wall Brothers, Blue Island, and sixty men employed by Adam Wickler's brick manufacturing establishment at Hammond, Ill., struck yesterday for eight hours' work without reduction in pay. The manufacturers express their determination to hold out against the demands of the men and fill their places with new employes.

It is thought that 500 or more additional brickmakers who are now working ten hours will be drawn into the movement.

Sunday Shaving Not a Necessity.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 20.—The supreme court yesterday decided the case of the appeal by Barber Knox, who was arrested and fined for keeping open on Sunday. The court holds that shaving and hair cutting are not works of necessity within the meaning of the statute, and the judgment of fine in the lower court is affirmed.

English Syndicate to Make Iron and Steel.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 20.—H. W. Hammond, representing an English syndicate, has selected a site at Vallejo, directly opposite the Mare Island navy yard, for extensive iron and steel works. Ten million dollars have been subscribed for the purpose by English capitalists.

Verdict in the Whitworth Case.

GREENVILLE, Miss., June 20.—The jury in the famous Whitworth trial, after being out one hour and fifty-five minutes, returned a verdict of not guilty. The acquitted was returned to jail to answer another indictment, for shooting with attempt to kill.

Killed with a Club.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., June 20.—At Plymouth, in Putnam county, John Moore became involved in trouble with Henry Bradley, which resulted in Moore striking Bradley with a club, causing death.

A Methodist Church Demolished.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., June 20.—Yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock a hurricane passed through Lowell, a small town twenty miles south of Charlotte. The Methodist church was completely demolished.

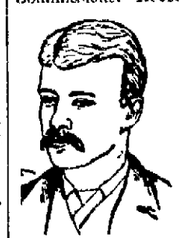

Civil Service Rules.

The Strict Letter of the Law Will Be Enforced.

PLAIN AND OUTSPOKEN WORDS.

Commissioner Roosevelt Explains the Real Purpose of the Commission—Callers at the White House—Other Dispatches from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt is very outspoken in his purpose to enforce the civil service law. He finds in the course of the inquiries of the commission that its real purpose is not clearly understood in all communities. He said just before starting for the west.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"We are starting out now to visit Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Grand Rapids and Detroit. In two or three places we want to make an investigation, but in the main all we want to do is to make an inspection and call the attention of the local postmasters and custom house officials to the civil service law, and make them understand that it is not a resolution in a party platform, but a statute of the United States, that must be rigorously obeyed under penalty of dismissal or indictment. We have, I find, to do two things. One is to make the officials understand that the law is obligatory and not optional, and the other is to get the same idea into the heads of the people.

"We find that some local postmasters and collectors have permitted the law to become practically void. They have apparently failed to realize that it is just as binding on them as any other statute. They have done their work very lazily, have failed to keep proper records, have even in some cases gone to the extreme of refusing to so much as answer letters from the civil service commission. Hereafter any insubordination of this character will not only result in the prompt reporting of the offender to the president, if need be, with a recommendation for his dismissal, but we will also take the matter into our hands, and decline to allow any examinations to be held in a delinquent office until we find everything arranged entirely to our satisfaction. If a postmaster declines to obey the law and to respect our directions absolutely, he will not be allowed to have any new employes. The commission saw the president the other day, and he reiterated to us his assurances that the law should be observed in its letter and spirit, and we could rest assured that he would tolerate no evasion. We feel confident, therefore, that we have a perfectly free hand in reporting the misdeeds of any official, Republican or Democrat.

"It is curious to see how this vicious patronage system that has so long obtained in the country has managed to make the people themselves to believe that only the adherents of the victorious party should apply for office. One of the serious difficulties with which we have to contend is to get Democrats to come forward and be examined. We are going to try our best to impress both public officials and the public itself with the fact that these examinations are going to be conducted absolutely on the square; that the law is to be administered without the least favor, that every man who comes forward will be examined, marked and certified purely on his merits, and absolutely without regard to his politics, and that the slightest attempt at evading the law on the part of any postmaster or other public official will be punished instantly to the extent of our powers."

The President Protested.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—A quiet little incident that did not attract much attention at the time but which was afterwards discussed quite freely occurred at the executive mansion yesterday at the president's public reception. Among the callers were many members of the Patriotic Sons of America, who are holding a convention in this city. Each member wore the large white badge of the order, and one of them after shaking hands with the chief magistrate attempted to pin his badge on the president's coat. The president gently but quickly stopped him, saying: "No, no; I would prefer not." The Patriotic Son of America desisted from further efforts in that direction.

Wanamaker on Prohibition.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—In speaking of the vote on the prohibition amendment in Pennsylvania, Postmaster General Wanamaker said that he was not suprised that the amendment had been defeated. He had expected the result. He was surprised, however, at the magnitude of the vote, and had not anticipated that the majority against the amendment would be so large.

Under the Modified Rule.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—Postmaster General Wanamaker has appointed W. A. Robinson, of California, a postoffice inspector under modified civil service rule 10, which permits ex-Federal soldiers to be reinstated in the classified service without examination. This is the first appointment in the postoffice department under the modified rule.

Willing to Accept.

WASHINGTON, June 20. Gen. Lucius Fairchild, of Wisconsin, has notified the president that he will accept the vacant place on the Cherokee commission. He will meet the other members of the commission in this city in a few days.

Resignation Received.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—Attorney General Miller has received the resignation of George A. Allen, United States attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania.

The Constellation Floated.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—The signal service observer at Cape Henry reports that the United States steamship Constellation was floated at 1:30 p. m.

BURKE INDICTED

For the Murder of Dr. Cronin, With Woodruff, Coughlin and Others.

CHICAGO, June 21.—The grand jury has presented an indictment against Marshall Delaney, alias Martin Burke, charging him with the murder of Dr. Cronin. The indictment is in two counts, the first being for the unqualified charge of murder; the second alleges conspiracy to do murder, and names Frank Woodruff, Daniel Coughlin, P. O. Sullivan, and other unknown persons as the co-conspirators.

When the indictment was handed to Judge Shepard he glanced at it and then handed it to a clerk, who at once repaired to Clerk Gilbert's office to make out the final papers necessary for taking proceedings to extradite Burke, who is now in jail in Winnipeg.

The grand jury in the afternoon heard the testimony of a large number of witnesses that were called during the coroner's investigation. Most of the evidence bore upon Cronin's fear that his life would be taken as the result of the machinations of Alexander Sullivan.

It is officially given out that no more indictments will be returned before the final report is ready. The indictment against Burke was brought into court at the earnest solicitation of Chief Hubbard, who said that it would take two weeks for the special messenger to make the circuit from Chicago to Winnipeg by the way of Springfield, Ill.; Washington, D. C., and Ottawa, Ont. The messenger will start at once.

Dispatches from Ottawa say that the report that Burke has made a confession is incorrect.

Burke Has Not Confessed.

WINNIPEG, June 20.—The report that Burke, under arrest on suspicion of complicity in the Cronin murder, has made a confession, is incorrect.

All attempts to interview Burke are futile. The police keep the strictest guard over the prisoner and allow no one but his counsel to see him. He was photographed yesterday much to his [illegible] A Chicago detective is expected to-morrow, when extradition proceedings will begin.

Two Hundred People Take a Fall.

PHILADELPHIA, June 20.—By the falling in of a roof of a building on Somerset street last night, about 250 people who were witnessing the "Fall of Babylon," were thrown to the ground and many of them injured. Most of the injured were taken home by friends before their names could be learned. The most severely injured are John McElroy, of 404 Linn street; Benjamin Engle, of 2525 Atlantic street, and Samuel Searles, of 2046 Fairhill street, who all had bones broken.

Shot Her Treasurer.

SARDIS, Miss., June 20.—John Williams was fatally shot at Emory church, ten miles east of here, last Sunday, by Mrs. Hattie Campbell. The shooting occurred just after the close of the religious services. The provocation for the killing was a statement made by Williams that he had been intimate with Mrs. Campbell several months ago, upon which assertion a suit for divorce is now pending.

Local Option in Michigan.

LANSING, Mich., June 20.—The local option bill, after hanging fire in the senate for weeks, passed that body yesterday, and will become a law as soon as it reaches the governor. A number of serious defects led the supreme court to declare the local option law of two years ago unconstitutional, and the new act has been carefully framed to avoid these objections.

Five Thousand Starving Miners.

BRAZIL, Ind., June 20.—The various sub-committees representing the ten districts of block miners reported 5,313 dependents yesterday at a slight increase. Seven thousand dollars relief were reported. The county commissioners united in a request to Governor Hovey to issue a proclamation commending the miners to the charity of the state.

Forger Suicides in Jail.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 20.—Nathan Schwartz, claiming to be a traveling salesman for a New York button house, and, it is said, is a son of Jacob Schwartz, 119 East Lombard street, Baltimore, Md., was arrested Tuesday afternoon for forging a check for $15. Shortly after being lodged in jail he took a dose of arsenic, and died at 10 o'clock.

The Volunteer is all Right.

BOSTON, June 18.—Edward Burgess has written a card denying the published reports that the Volunteer is warped and bulged. The yacht is in perfect condition, he says, and good for twenty years' racing. He also says Gen. Payne will not sell the Volunteer to any one who will not defend the America's cup if called upon.

Yellow Fever on Ship Board.

BROOKLYN, June 20.—The health authorities assert positively that Dr. Duncan, who arrived on the Colon, has yellow fever. Police are guarding the house where Duncan lies.

Two Railroad Wrecks

Both Occurred Two Miles East of Steubenville, O.

THREE DEATHS THE RESULT.

Several Others Injured, One of Whom Will Prove Fatal—Cause of the First Wreck Unknown, the Second the Result of the First—Other Disasters on the Rail.

PITTSBURG, June 20.—The second section of Pan-Handle train No. 7, west-bound, was wrecked near the New Cumberland junction, two miles east of Steubenville, O., at 12 o'clock yesterday. The third, fourth and fifth cars from the engine were thrown from the track, the cause for which has not yet been ascertained. The train was running about forty-five miles an hour, and was made up of express and postal cars exclusively.

The train was manned by one engineer, one fireman, one conductor and one brakeman and fifteen postal clerks. Postal Clerks J. P. Payne and E. R. Reinhart, were instantly killed. The seriously injured are Conductor Burris, Brakeman McFarland and Postal Clerks W. S. Bolton and J. E. Matthews. The less seriously injured are Postal Clerks T. D. Armstrong, E. E. Benner, C. J. Minor and Frank Shook. The injured were taken to the hospital at Steubenville, O.

Brakeman John McFarland, of Mansfield, O., died at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The hospital physicians say that Conductor Burriss' injuries are fatal, and that he cannot live much longer. The others injured are resting comfortable and will probably recover.

A collision of freight trains occurred at the scene of the wreck a short time after it occurred. Three sections of a freight train following the mail pulled up and stopped. The engine of the first section was detached from its train and used to assist in clearing the track in front. A fourth section of the freight came up under full speed and crashed into the rear of the third section, smashing the engine and wrecking several cars of merchandise. The trainmen jumped and escaped serious injury.

Collision of Freight Trains.

PETERSBURG, Va., June 20.—There was a collision between two sections of a freight train yesterday morning near Reams station, on the Petersburg and Weldon railroad. The locomotives and nine cars were derailed and smashed, and Engineer Wood and a colored train hand were badly cut. The southbound mail was delayed here all day on account of the wreck.

Freight Train Wrecked.

NEWARK, N. J., June 20.—A freight train ran off the track on the Pennsylvania railway at South Newark last night. Two brakemen and the conductor were badly injured. Two cars laden with fine leaf tobacco were broken open and thieves carried away part of the tobacco. Two of the thieves were arrested.

SAVED THE TRAIN.

A Young Nebraska Girl Risks Her Own Life to Prevent a Wreck.

OMAHA, Neb., June 20.—Nebraska has a Kate Shelly and she is a farmer's daughter named Mabel Peck, living near Blair, who risked her life during the storm Saturday evening to save from certain destruction freight train No. 20, on the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley line. Her father's farm lies near the railroad, between Blair and Hillsdale. During Saturday's storm Mabel noticed that the water was running down the track like a river. Thinking something might be wrong, she threw her father's coat over her shoulders and went down to the crossing. There she found that one hundred feet of road bed had been washed under and the track was buried in the debris.

At this moment, through the sound of the storm, Mabel heard the whistle of the eastbound freight, as it ran into Hillsdale. There was no one at the farm but her mother, and no one near who could aid her. Determined to save the train and its crew, the brave girl ran toward the cut through the torrents of rain and in the gloom of the approaching night. When the train was half way down the grade, approaching the washout, the engineer saw the girl standing before it on the track waving the coat as a signal of alarm. The train was stopped in time, and the crew thanked Mabel for saving their lives. Miss Peck is 18 years old, with slight girlish figure and dark eyes and hair. Train No. 20 has adopted the custom of giving her a grateful salute of greeting each time it rolls past her father's farmhouse.

New Hampshire Republican Convention.

CONCORD, N. H., June 20.—The Republican legislative caucus last night nominated A. B. Thompson, of Concord, for secretary of state; Solon Carter, of Concord, for state treasurer; John B. Clark, of Manchester, for state printer, and Sylvester Little, of Antrim, for commissary general.

Result of the Election in Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA, June 20.—Official and estimated returns from every county in the state show a majority of 188,449 against the proposed prohibition amendment. The amendment providing for the repeal of the poll tax qualification is lost by about 150,000 majority.

Saved His Neighbors the Trouble.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 20.—George Nascone, a well-to-do citizen, hanged himself at Plains yesterday. He imagined that his neighbors wanted to hang him, and said he would head them off.

A VALUABLE RINGER.

Fifteen Hundred Dimes Put in the Charleston's Bell.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—The secretary of the navy has written a letter to Representative Morrow, of California, thanking him for the information regarding the metal in the bell of the new cruiser Charleston. Mr. Morrow, in his letter, informed the secretary that a few days before the casting of the bell, the pattern-maker at the works suggested that it would be a pity to use ordinary metal and suggested that each of the workmen on the steamer contribute ten cents in silver to enrich the composition and give a superior ring to it.

The entire force, of more than 1,000, responded to a man. The sum realized amounted to about $150, nearly all of it in ten cent pieces. It was placed in the crucible and mixed with the other metal used in making the bell. In concluding his letter the secretary says: "There have been many costly presents made to ships of the navy by towns and persons; but there is not one that the department values and appreciates more highly than this offering from the workmen of the Charleston."

FREIGHT HOUSE BURNED.

The New York Central Meet With a Loss at Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y., June 20.—The New York Central freight house on Ohio street extending from Cincinnati to Chicago streets, and from Ohio street to the Buffalo creek, was entirely destroyed by fire yesterday. The fire originated in the engine room and spread so rapidly that in a few minutes the whole freight house was in flames, and the 150 men working inside had to run for their lives. The building burned like tinder.

A number of men who were working in the cars were severely burned. The loss is about $15,000.

The Fire at Ballston Spa.

BALLSTON SPA, N. Y., June 20.—Four stores and two barns were burned here yesterday involving a loss of $20,000. The burned buildings included the following: Grumakers fruit store, Paddock's paint store, Finley's furniture store and barn, the Hackett house, stable and the tobacco store of L. Garlich.

COLD-BLOODED MURDER.

Widow of a Supposed Suicide Confesses to Having Killed Her Husband.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 20.—On Nov. 12, 1888, Richard O. Allen, an aged farmer living five miles southwest of Washington, Ind., was found tied to a tree near his house with his throat cut from ear to ear. The death was thought to be a case of suicide, and no inquiry was made.

A few days ago, while laboring under religious excitement Mrs. Charlotte Allen, the 70-year-old widow of the dead man, confessed to two colored servants that she committed the crime. She said that she and her husband had trouble as to who was the rightful owner of the farm, and in order to settle the dispute she gave her husband morphine in his tea. Allen fell asleep in the garden, she then procured a table knife and a rope, and going to the place where her husband was lying, she tied the rope around his body, and making several slashes at his throat, half severed the head from the neck. She then dragged the body to a tree and tied it there.

A Stark county, O., farmer named Grice attempted to commit suicide by shooting himself. Domestic trouble is supposed to have caused the act.

The taking of testimony for the defense began yesterday in the Britton murder trial at Hillsboro, O. A number of witnesses testified to peculiarities of the defendant's family.

Thirteen saloon keepers of York township, Athens county, O., indicted for violating the local option law, pleaded guilty when they heard of the supreme court decision, and were fined $100 each and sent to jail for five days.

The Railroad Wholly to Blame.

CANTON, O., June 20.—Coroner Shaeffer has filed his verdict in the inquest of the killing of Lawrence and Peter Streb and two orphan boys by the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago limited express at Louisville, O., a few days ago. The verdict finds the railroad wholly to blame for the accident. In addition to the suit for $10,000 damages brought by the guardian of one of the orphan boys, two other suits for $10,000 each have been entered for the two Strobs.

A Georgia Hanging.

ROME, Ga., June 20.—Hardy Hamilton, who, in February last, murdered Joe Lee, a Chinaman, was hanged here yesterday. Ten or twelve thousand persons came in from the surrounding country, but only the county officials and newspaper reporters were allowed inside of the jail where the execution took place.

Shot His Son-in-Law.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 20.—A special to The Advertiser from Clanton states that W. A. Collier, a lawyer, shot and killed his son-in-law, Philip Givhan, this morning. Givhan had threatened to kill Collier and his family. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of justifiable homicide.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

Quotations for the Money, Stock, Produce and Cattle Market for June 19.

NEW YORK.—Money 2 per cent. Exchange steady; governments steady.

Currency sixes, 118 bid; four coupons, 122 bid; four-and-a-halfs, 109¾ bid.

The stock market opened quiet and irregular this morning. Rock Island, Louisville and Nashville, Delaware and Hudson, and the Northern Pacific's were weak and lower, while Jersey Central, Oregon Transcontinental and Western Union were firm and higher to the extent of ¼ to ¾ per cent. During the first hour the market continued irregular. Some of the leaders made further advances while others declined. Lackawanna and New England displayed considerable weakness while Oregon Transcontinental and Oregon Navigation advanced 1¾ and 1 per cent. respectively. After 11 o'clock the coal stocks became the special features, while the general list became dull. There was very little done during the hour except in the coalers, Atchison, New England, St. Paul and Union Pacific. At noon, however, most of the list showed fractional advances and at this writing the market is firm.

BRAZIL, as well as the United States and the Argentine Republic, is now receiving very large accessions of immigrants from Europe. The inflow of European immigrants in the South American Empire last year numbered over one hundred and thirty thousand.

THE St. Louis "Globe-Democrat" takes occasion to remark that under Col. Brice's management last year the Democratic party carried Missouri by less than one-fourth of 1 per cent. of the total number of votes polled. The fact that he is to have command again in 1892 makes it certain that Missouri will give a handsome Republican majority.

THIS is a very remarkable season; and it is the more remarkable because last summer was very much like it. The months of April, May and June last year were almost unprecedented in the amount of their rainfall; and although there were no great floods such as have marked this month, there was a superabundance of water, and the grass and trees were kept green all through July and August by the moisture they had previously imbibed.

THE Prohibitionists will not find much comfort or encouragement in the crushing defeat administered to them in Pennsylvania Tuesday. About three-fourths of the votes cast seem to have gone against the proposition. So far as we can see it seems to have been a fair contest, and while we are without sufficient data to give an intelligent resume of the contest and its result, it seems to be only an indication of the great progress the "regulation" idea has made in the last three years. The liquor men voted against the proposition probably because they were afraid it might be enforced, and the temperance people against it because they were afraid it might not be enforced. Hence the big majority against it. The efficacy of the Prohibition law is questioned seriously. Men whose sympathies are all with temperance and have had experience in States that have adopted Prohibition laws, are many of them, not impressed with that method of handling the liquor question.

Young Ones and Old Ones.

Traveling men have more points of resemblance to actors than any other class that I know of. Maybe it is because life on the road throws them largely into the company of Thespians with whom they fraternize and exchange notes wherever the contact is made. This likeness breaks out even on a man's first trip. Young actors and young commercial travelers alike glory in all the paraphernalia of a conquering blood. Shiny silk hats, patent leather boots, flashing jewelry sometimes, and at any rate clothing enough for a trip to Europe, which they calculate will at once bring provincial admiration down to a point described as the "hypnotic" state wherein the subject, bewildered by a powerful display of brilliancy, allows himself to be acted upon at the magnetic will. The Booths, Barretts and Irvings of the profession, if I may be allowed the simile, prepare themselves for a long and hard tussle with the practical hardships of traveling and demean themselves rather as the humble attendants upon the glory of their wares than as the sole repositories of everything worth admiring among their employer's belongings.—Interview in Clothier and Furnisher.

OCEAN BUNCO STEERERS.

PEOPLE WHO ACT AS INFORMERS UPON SMUGGLERS.

They Make a Good Thing Out of It, Though the Calling Is Rather Contemptible—Merchants Who Put a Fly in Their Rivals' Coffee.

There are scores of men and women in this city who make a large income every year by acting as informers upon smugglers. Sometimes they take a trip to Europe themselves. They are generally well supplied with money, and to the majority of their acquaintances their source of income is a mystery.

For years past it has been the policy of the government, through the secretary of the treasury, to award 25 per cent. of the value received from the sale of smuggled articles to the party who discovered the smuggler, or who gave information leading to such discovery.

It is estimated that in this manner the government pays out the sum of $100,000 a year.

BETRAYING FRIENDS.

In some cases the special deputy officers employed in the custom house are given a percentage of the seizures which they make, and this is the principal reason for their vigilance toward incoming passengers, which has in many cases been very offensive.

The stewards and stewardesses of nearly all the big steamships are among the most active informers, and they frequently make a lot of money through it.

"They have not the slightest compunction in betraying their best friends," said a special agent. "They make a practice of finding out which of the passengers have diamonds, or silks and satins, or other valuable articles that they hope to smuggle through, and to these they intimate that smuggling is the easiest thing in the world. As soon as the vessel arrives the informer rushes to a special agent with the information, and the would be smuggler loses his or her goods as a result of listening to the talk of the tempter. There is not a trip made by one of the great steamships when this does not occur. An exception was noted the other day when the stewardess of one of the French line vessels was herself caught smuggling, and goods valued at $1,000 were taken from her."

Milliners and tailors do not hesitate to turn informers in order to get a rival into trouble, although they do not often ask for a share of the reward.

"We often receive a cable from Paris reading: 'Look out for milliner Miss Smith on Etruria,'" said the special agent, "or some similar wording. The cable is sent by some rival milliner who knows that Miss Smith is to sail on the Etruria, and that the chances are ten to one that she will endeavor to smuggle in a trunkful of gewgaws with which to ornament her stock of headgear. Poor Miss Smith seldom learns how the customs officers learned of her attempt, while her stealthy rival probably comes in on the following steamer and escapes through the lines without suspicion being attached to her."

American tailors and cloth importers who visit England for goods are inveterate informers upon their rivals in business, and most of the tips upon which the special agents act are cabled across by some anonymous sender who does not care for the reward, but who wants to get a rival into the meshes of the custom house.

"Jewelers stick together better than any other class of men who smuggle," said a customs official yesterday. "It is rare indeed that one jeweler will inform upon another, and when one is caught smuggling the others flock around him in sympathy, and sometimes combine to make good his losses."

There are several professional informers who make it their business to travel almost constantly on the ocean steamers, where they lure amateur smugglers into their net.

These men are well dressed and pose as business or professional men who have been abroad on a vacation.

On the voyage from Liverpool one of them makes himself agreeable to the men on board, and as the steamer nears New York he boasts of his ability to smuggle anything through the custom house, from a diamond pin to an elephant.

"I always do it," he exclaims, confidently. "I never make a European trip without bringing back several hundred dollars' worth of goods free of duty."

Then he urges his friends to make the attempt also, and one or two at least always do so.

Of course they are caught, while the gentlemanly informer makes the price of his passage and considerable spending money as the result of his work.

Such informers are well known to the custom house people, who designate them as "ocean bunco steerers."

No attempt is made by the steamship authorities to prevent the work of the informers, some of whom pick out a good steamer upon which to employ their talents, and practically live for years upon it.—New York Journal.

A Cure for Leprosy.

A cure for leprosy has been found, says Mr. Clifford, the last European to visit Father Damien. It is gurjun oil, the produce of a fir tree which grows plentifully in the Andaman Islands. "It was discovered by Dr. Dougall, and Mr. Clifford was assured by Sir Donald Stewart, who was then governor of the islands, and who has sent me the official medical report, that every single case in the place was cured by it. The lepers were convicts, and it was therefore impossible to enforce four hours a day of rubbing the ointment all over their bodies, and the taking of two small doses internally. In some of the cases the disease was of many years' standing, and the state to which it had reduced its victims was indescribably dreadful, yet after eight months sufferers were able to run and to use a heavy pickax, and every symptom of leprosy had disappeared." Father Damien tried it, but too late.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

Senator Cullom prides himself on looking like Lincoln.

Mr. Bret Harte has taken up his permanent residence in London.

Secretary Rusk is addicted to the old fashioned habit of taking snuff.

Sir Julian Pauncefote is one of the cleverest swordsmen at Washington.

Herbert Gladstone says his father is still good for a twenty mile tramp.

Charles Dudley Warner is paid $1,200 a year for his department in Harper's Magazine.

Ex-President Woolsey, of Yale, is confined to his bed from a complication of ailments due to old age.

The emperor of Russia has purchased Siemiradzke's colossal picture of "Phryne in Eleusis" for 70,000 rubles.

Adolph Sutro will build a magnificent library for San Francisco and also give the city a park of 1,400 acres.

Professor James Russell Lowell will return to his residence at Cambridge, Mass., when he has finished his English trip.

Archdeacon Philpott, who lately died in England at the age of nearly 99 years, left thirty-six grandchildren to mourn his loss.

Three of the richest merchants in the country are comparatively young men. Wanamaker is 51, Marshall Field, of Chicago, 53, and Phil Armour, 55.

M. Gaume, the Catholic bookseller of Paris, who recently died at the age of 89, was one of the last survivors of Napoleon's armies, and took part in the expedition to Moscow.

John Sherman is the only man now in the senate who was a member of that body when the bill was passed abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia, twenty-seven years ago.

In the whole history of opera in England, Carl Rosa appears as almost the only manager who always paid twenty shillings in the pound, and who died worth a handsome fortune.

George W. Winnis, state superintendent of the schools of Kansas, twenty-one years ago worked as a laborer in excavating for the foundation of the building in which he now holds, worthily, an honorable office.

The manuscript of John Lothrop Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic" was returned by Murray, the publisher, with thanks. It was no loss to Motley, but Murray missed a book that had "tens of thousands in it."

President Carnot, of France, is very fond of Americans, and is cultivating sedulously the society of our countrymen now in Paris. At his receptions more Americans are to be found than in any drawing room in Europe.

The shah of Persia, having been made acquainted with Sir Edwin Arnold's poetical work, "With Sadi in the Garden," has conferred upon the author the decoration of a commander of the imperial order of the Lion and the Sun.

Capt. "Jake" Vanderbilt, the only surviving brother of the commodore and uncle of the late William H. Vanderbilt, is on the ragged edge of four score and two years in age, but is still as hale and hearty as a man not yet two score.

Justice Gray is the giant of the supreme bench, and one of the tallest men in official life. He has dark hair and the florid complexion of the typical English squire. He is genial, hospitable and greatly given to the charms of home life.

Henry George has made a wonderful impression on the Britishers. The London and provincial press agree in saying that he has swayed the masses more powerfully than any man who has appealed to them from the platform in a generation.

Autograph hunters will do well to let Dr. Hans von Bulow alone. He has engaged a clever young Russian to write replies to such bores for him, and she does so in Russian, generally with a touch of satire, as "Hans von Bulow, commercial traveler in Beethoven."

Mr. Robert M. McLane, recently American minister at Paris, thinks that Boulanger's influence has fallen off a little, and that it would fall off a great deal more if he were to go back on his republican professions and record—a thing the general's friends tell Mr. McLane he will never do.

William Dean Howells has returned to Belmont, Mass., of which town he expects to become a permanent resident. The novelist used to live there a number of years ago and regards the spot with a good deal of affection. His home there is a fine old mansion, surrounded by beautiful grounds.

One of the few genuine Cossacks to be found in New York may be seen in the office of the Russian consul. His name is Dr. Peter Popoff. He is lithe, alert and of sanguine temperament. He is a scholar of rare attainments and a man of the most placid disposition. He is a graduate of the University of St. Petersburg.

What most took the shah's eye on the occasion of his visit to the czar was the superb uniform of the 400 Imperial Horse guards who surrounded the Russian ruler when he received his visitor in person at the railway station. The uniform consists of a spotless white coat, top boots reaching above the knees, and a helmet of what looks like pure gold, surmounted by an enormous eagle of silver.

Mr. David Laurie, of Glasgow, has refused $10,000 for the famous "Alard" Stradivarius violin, but $12,500 has now been offered on behalf of an American, and the matter is under consideration. The "Alard" formerly belonged to J. B. Vuillaume, the expert, who gave it to his son-in-law, M. Delphin Alard, violin professor at the Paris conservatoire, who sold it to Mr. Laurie. It is dated 1715, and the only alteration since made is a slight lengthening of the neck.

ELECTRIC NOTES.

In France a system of universal telegraphic language is proposed, which it is claimed would be of great service to the public.

Communication with the crew of the submarine torpedo boat Goubat was maintained by telephone during the entire time the boat was submerged—eight hours.

In recent night maneuvers at Southampton, England, the efficiency of the electric light in land defense against troops advancing on intrenchments was amply demonstrated.

Professor Rowland in a recent address showed that in certain cases in which an alternating current is used the current in the interior of a conductor may be in a direction opposite to that at the surface of the conductor.

There is talk of applying telephones to the infectious wards of the French hospitals, so as to enable sick people isolated in their contagious sufferings to have the comfort of hearing their relatives' voices without any risk of conveying infection.

In some experiments by Professor Braun on the production of electric currents by bending metal wires, he has shown that the greatest development of current is produced by the elongation or compression of a nickel wire wound in the form of a spiral spring.

LIGHT AND AIRY.

Bostonian Courtship.

A man of modern science wooed
A maiden of receptive mood,
Who, dreading lest contagion might
Do mischief to her chosen wight,
With sol. bichloride washed her hair
And sponged her limbs and body fair.

She rinsed her mouth with Listerine,
And held, her snow white teeth between,
A pad of antiseptic gauze,
Covering her nose, as well as jaws,
Which formed a sort of respirator
Between them and her osculator.

But this reminds: I should have told
That these were things he'd taught of old,
With others which I may not tell, in Regard to spots that germs might dwell in.
She was a wise professor's daughter
And practiced all which had been taught her.

So this good medicine man, with pride
Clasping his antiseptic bride,
In disinfected murmur low
Asked "Why she loved her doctor so?"
And softly nestling down, she sighed,
"Your's such a dear old germicide."
—Medical and Surgical Journal.

Sure Signs.

Wife—Cyrus, I am sure young Spoonamore is becoming serious in his attentions to our Susie.

Husband—Nonsense! What makes you think so?

"He wears a new necktie every time he comes."

"Do you think Susie cares anything for him?"

"Yes. She hasn't eaten an onion this spring."—Chicago Tribune.

An Advertisement.

Wife—Don't fail to insert an advertisement about poor lost Fido.

Husband—Fear not. (Exit.)

Wife treads in paper the following morning)—"Ten dollars reward. Lost last Monday, a measly, bare lipped, cross eyed old yellow pup, answering to the name of Fido. He has no tail, is wild with fleas, has a glass eye, and his whines would make a rhinoceros shudder. Knows how to bite. Fifty dollars reward if he is returned in a hearse." (Wife faints.)—The Epoch.

The Happy Linguist.

I'm up in German, Latin, French;
Spanish I know, and Greek;
Sanskrit I read without a wrench,
And Russian I can speak,
And I'm going to be a spodal
Of Volapuk this week!

I never dared to hope for this;
My wildest dreams were weak
To mount the summit of such bliss,
Ambition's sunniest peak—
Oh! I'm going to be a spodal
Of Volapuk this week.
—Boston Transcript.

A Self Evident Case.

"Were you acquainted with the deceased?" inquired the coroner.

"Yes, sir," answered the witness. "He was the proprietor of a clothing store. Six weeks ago he invested $10,000 in straw hats for the spring and summer trade."

"Gentlemen," observed the coroner, buttoning his overcoat, "it seems hardly worth while to examine any other witnesses. It was undoubtedly a case of suicide."—Chicago Tribune.

It Would Be All Right Then.

Little Beggar Girl (at the door)—The meat you gave me yesterday, mum, is too dried out to eat, mum.

Lady (impatiently)—Well, have you brought it back?

Little Beggar Girl—Oh, no, mum. Me mother says if you'll send her some lard and sour and a bit of butter for the salted, with a thimble, she'll make a foine pie out of it.—Harper's Bazar.

The One Exception.

She's decidedly homely; I don't like her eyes,
And the shade of her hair is the tint I despise.
Her complexion is bad, unattractive her chin;
Her mouth is too large, her nose is too thin.
But all of these things are but trifles in life,
Compared with true graces. I'll make her my wife;
For I gave up my seat in the street car to her,
And she looked at me kindly and said, "Thank you, sir."
—Omaha World.

A Judge of Art.

Bobby (to his sister)—Is Mr. de Lunkhead, your beau, a judge of fine arts?

Sister—A very good judge, Bobby. But why do you ask?

Bobby—Oh, he told me last night that he was going to get the man who painted your portrait to paint his house.—Drake's Magazine.

He Died Suddenly.

"How did your husband meet his death?"

"He fell through a trap."

"In the dark, I suppose?"

"No, it was broad daylight, but there was a black cap over his face and he couldn't see, poor man."—Yankee Blade.

The Commencement Season.

"Standing with reluctant feet,
Where the brook and river meet,"
Are the pretty graduates sweet;
In their gowns of silk and satin,
Getting sheepskins done in Latin!
What a dainty beauty show!
And—sakes alive! How much they know!
—Washington Critic.

Opprobrious Epithets.

"Mr. Jones and Mr. Robinson had a dreadful quarrel, I hear," said Mrs. Fangle.

"You don't say!" exclaimed her husband.

"Yes, I do; and Mr. Robinson applied the most oppressive epitaphs to Mr. Jones."—Harper's Bazar.

A Ridiculous Idea.

Hotel Clerk—Good night, sir, mind and don't blow out the gas.

Green Guest—Don't blow it out, you say! Why, you don't expect a chap to sleep with all that light in the room, do you.—Drake's Magazine.

About This Time.

Just now bright flowers of various hues,
The citizen he grows 'em;
The girl puts on her tennis shoes
And wears a dress that shows 'em.
—Boston Courier.

An Unpardonable Sin.

Editor's Wife—I wonder what can be the matter with Mrs. Smith; she hasn't returned my visit yet.

Editor (absent mindedly)—Perhaps you neglected to inclose a stamp.—Harper's Bazar.

A Long Felt Want.

Oh, for a gun that is charged with tacks,
And waddled firm and tight,
For the man who whistles from night till morn,
And again from morn till night.
—Merchant Traveler.

What It Was For.

Mr. Fangle—Well, I see they have organized a milk trust now.

Mrs. Fangle—I suppose the next thing will be to build crematories.—Drake's Magazine.

Seasonable.

Now ripening are the native fruits
That everybody wants;
The girls put on short kilted coats,
The dogs put on long pants.
—Boston Courier.

IN THE HEART OF ASIA.

DAVID KER'S EXPERIENCES IN A WILD, BEAUTIFUL COUNTRY.

Splendor of the Scenery in "Queenly Samarcand"—Brave Old Gen. Abramoff and His Wound—A Curious Meal in a Far Away Land.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, June 17.—The Zer-Affshan (gold giving) river is rushing down in full flood, and all around us is one whirl of boiling foam as we struggle against the charge of the headlong current, while the dull, grinding roar of the cruel pebbles that are champing and chafing against each other in the waters below sounds like the distant trample of a thousand horsemen.

Only a few moments ago I was laughing at the huge, clumsy frame and seven foot wheels of the Turcoman wagon, for which we had just exchanged the light Russian transport cart that had carried us across the ghostly solitudes of the "Hungry Steppe." But now those seven foot wheels are already half covered and sinking deeper with every moment. Our sturdy Tartar horses can barely keep their footing against the mighty swirl of the torrent; and the steep grassy ridge of the farther shore, which seemed so near when we first caught sight of it, now appears terribly far away, and seems to recede farther every time we look up at it.

Bang, bang, bang, the leaping waters come hammering against the trembling planks beneath our feet, like the bony hand of Death knocking for entrance. Our driver—a gaunt, shaggy haired, wild eyed Bashkir, with nothing on but a greasy sheepskin—goads his flagging horses to new efforts with a succession of screams as our piercing as the whistle of a locomotive, while my Tartar servant, as he and I cling to each other to keep ourselves from being flung headlong out of the rocking, reeling wagon, mutters with sullen Moslem resignation:

"Master, if we are drowned, it is kismet" (fate).

"Fate be hanged" growl I; and, indeed, after having in the course of this one summer had two previous escapes of drowning, risked being hanged as a spy, lain prisoner for seven weeks in a Cossack mud fort, faced a desert sand storm, tracked my way for a thousand miles over the most perilous wastes of Central Asia by the bleaching skeletons of my predecessors, passed unharmed through countless Tartar savages, and defied two attacks of fever and Asiatic plague, it does seem hard to be drowned at last in a beggarly ditch like this.

But such appears only too likely to be the end of it, after all. Our horses are already almost off their feet, and another moment may see them and the wagon and ourselves whirled headlong down the furious river to certain death.

But all at once the deadly pressure slackens, the rocking of the wagon becomes less violent, the gasping, struggling horses seem to rise higher out of the water, and our goblin driver pants forth a guttural, "Mashi-Allah!" (praise God). We have struck a sunken bar of gravelly sand that juts out into the stream from the opposite shore, and, picking our way carefully along it, we come safely out upon dry land a few minutes later.

And now comes our reward. A zigzag path carries us quickly up the Chopan-Ata ridge above us (amid the thorny undergrowth of which a few whitened, sapless bones still linger as tokens of the great battle that sealed the fate of Samarcand and of Central Asia), and from its crest we look down in the glory of the sunrise upon the full splendor of a panorama to which no words can do justice.

The whole breadth of the vast oval basin below us is one dark green mass of semi-tropical foliage, through which three or four tiny streams dance and sparkle in the sunlight. On either side of us the curving slopes of the bold ridge that we have just climbed form a frame well worthy of this matchless picture. Far to the southward the bare, yellow sandstone hills of Shahr Sabz (the Central Asian Montenegro) tower like a brazen wall against the lustrous sky, while in the midst of all, high above the sea of clustering leaves and green tender vines, rises the former capital of Asia, "queenly Samarcand," with its endless vista of shining domes and tall, spear pointed minarets, and white, flat roofed houses, and stern, gray ramparts, and giant towers glowing like rainbows with the barbaric richness of their many colored mosaics—all which, steeped in the cloudless splendor of the clear bright summer morning, burst upon our eyes in one dazzling blaze of glory.

"If they ever get a railroad up here," thought I, little dreaming how soon the Trans-Caspian railway, via Askabad and Merv, was to make good my words, "all the tourists in the world ought to come here in a body."

But at that moment we had something else to think of than admiring the scenery, wet and weary as we were and sleepless during two nights of incessant hurrying through the ghostly solitudes of the Tartar steppes, for just then I was doing the same sort of "match against time" along the eastern side of the great desert which my brother correspondent, J. A. Meldahan of The New York Herald (the only man except myself who had succeeded in penetrating Central Asia during the war in spite of Russia's opposition), was performing at its western extremity. Urging our jaded team to what little speed was left in them, we rattled down the rocky slope into Samarcand, and, fighting our way through clouds of dust worthy of an Arabian samoon, pulled up at length in front of the quaint little timber post house, with its black and white stripes, which was our only available refuge, hotels being an unheard of phenomenon in Central Asia.

My first care was to examine my store chests and camp equipage, which, after two days' bumping and jolting over the desert and the passage of a flooded river, would naturally be—as a British tourist said of Pompeii and Herculaneum—"most disgracefully out of repair." And in truth I found them—in the graphic phrase of English sailors—"all nohow." The fragments of my ink bottle were stuck like cloves all over my last Bologna sausage, while the ink which it had contained was adding a new and piquant flavor to my Russian camp biscuits. A lump of half melted sugar had modestly retired from view into one of my stockings. My few remaining sheets of writing paper were adhering, with a firmness worthy of a better cause, to the inner side of a half eaten rye loaf, and a large piece of chocolate lay outstretched at its ease in a packet of black tea.

"Well," cried I, "here is a fine chance for an experiment. Let us see how chocolate and tea taste together."

Into my camp kettle they both went and "how they tasted together" I soon found to my cost, from the most horrible flavor that had ever assailed my palate, most as it was to every queer dish from the bohea of Turkestan to the pounded black ants of South America. But a kind of froth in the dregs of the mixture suddenly attracted my attention, and a closer inspection showed me that the supposed "chocolate" which I had been mixing with my tea was really a piece of brown soap!

The detail of this chocolate misadventure had a great success that evening at the table of the military governor of Samarcand, brave old Gen. Abramoff, who invited me to dinner the moment he heard of my arrival, and welcomed me as warmly as if I had been his best friend, instead of being a newly released prisoner who was still under grave suspicion, and whom he might any day be called upon to sacrifice on the altar of duty as unflinchingly as that resolute Irishman who vowed "to hang himself or perish in the attempt."

The dinner table was laid, according to Asiatic custom, in an open sided pavilion in the midst of the general's garden; and the soft light of the colored lamps that hung amid the dark, glossy foliage of the encircling trees, falling upon the gold laced uniforms and handsome faces of the guests, gave to the whole scene quite an operatic effect, which was very picturesquely heightened by the dark eastern faces, white robes, crimson sashes, blue turbans and tall, gaunt figures of the native attendants.

Seated in the place of honor at my host's right hand I had an excellent chance of viewing at my leisure a man of whom I had heard so much, and whose name will live in the history of Russia as long as the world lasts. As I then saw him for the first time Gen. Abramoff looked "every inch a soldier," and his square, powerful frame and bold, manly, sunburned face, with its thick mustache and short, grayish brown hair, would have made a priceless study for a painter who was then just beginning to achieve the renown which he has since attained in full measure—Vasili Vereshtchagin.

A black skull cap covered the old warrior's massive head, masking a gaping scar more glorious than the crown of Russia. The history of that wound (which I should never have learned from the hero himself) I had already heard from others—how Abramoff, left almost alone amid the dying and the dead when the Russians were falling like leaves beneath the deadly fire that withered their rash and ill concerted attack on Kokan, was still cheering on his fainting men, and watching in vain for the supports which some miserable blunder had delayed, when he was struck on the forehead by a bullet which plowed its way along the whole crown of the head, from front to back, though happily without penetrating the skull.

"It's lucky he fainted, or we could never have got him away," said the officer who told me the story. "But when we praised him as the bravest of us all, he shook his head, and said there was a far braver man among us. And then he told us of a grenadier whom he had seen carrying away a wounded man in his arms, when six of the enemy came rushing upon him at once. Then the Russian laid down his wounded comrade as tenderly as a mother with her child, and, clubbing his empty rifle, fought the whole six of them single handed; and when our fellows came up to the rescue they found this man, with three wounds in him, still standing over his friend and keeping five of the six at bay, while the sixth lay dead under foot, with his skull smashed in like an egg shell."

All went off merrily, and I have seldom had a pleasanter meal than this haphazard picnic, far away in the grim deserts of Asia, among men whom the world regards as mere savages thinly lacquered over with an outside show of civilization. When dinner was done my host produced for my amusement a number of sketches of local military positions, executed with such admirable clearness and precision that I eagerly asked the author's name.

"A Capt. Skobeleff, who has lately joined us here," replied the general, little thinking that the unknown name which he uttered so carelessly was destined to shake the whole world with its terrible renown barely four years later.

"Central Asia seems a fine place to learn both war and diplomacy. When I was at Fort Kazalinsk last month, on the other side of the desert, Col Goloff, the commandant, allowed me to watch him dispensing justice to the Tartars, and they seemed to go away quite satisfied, though it struck me that his judgments were rather harsh, and his way of giving them harsher still. But when I hinted as much he only answered: "When a native comes to me with a complaint I let him tell his story right through to the end, even if he takes an hour to it; and then, when he's had his talk fairly out (which is what he wants), he don't so much mind being oppressed a little. Now, an Englishman in the same case would stop him short in the first five minutes and tell him to hold his tongue for a cursed, prating fool."

"That's just where we have the advantage, beyond a doubt," said Abramoff. "The English persist in treating every Oriental as a European and judging him from a European point of view, while we, being half Asiatics ourselves, treat him as an Asiatic and judge him from an eastern point of view."

"And, moreover," said I, "when John Bull has any underhand work to do he comforts his conscience by always doing it very badly. When he has to bribe he invariably bribes the wrong man. When he must tell a lie he tells it so clumsily as to deceive no one, whereas the Russian gives his whole heart to the duty of deceiving his neighbor, and does it thoroughly well. There is a verse of an old English psalm which just photographs the modern Russian diplomatist:

"More soft than butter were his words,
While in his breast was war;
His speeches were more smooth than oil,
And yet drawn swords they are."

The general bowed as if acknowledging a high compliment (for such it probably appeared to him), and turned the talk upon the battle of Chopan-Ata, the scene of which I had traversed that morning on my way to the city. Abramoff himself had figured prominently in that famous fight as a colonel of Cossacks, and he needed little pressing to tell the whole story over again.

In the old warrior's stirring words every feature of that memorable struggle lives before me again. There stand the little handful of Russians on the river bank, with the rushing stream before them, and beyond it the great mountain ridge, all ablaze with polished helmets, and flashing swords, and embroidered tunics, and caparisoned steeds, and snow white turbans, and all the barbaric splendor of an eastern army. Then comes the shout of "Forward!"—the plunge into the whirling waters—the blaze and [illegible] of common and musketry from above—then forms of the daring assailants struggling through foaming water and [illegible] rolling smoke. Then, all at once, glittering masses overhead begin to [illegible] and tremble, and suddenly the [illegible] break and scatters like a flock of sheep, and plunges in one great cataract of headlong flight down the farther slope of the ridge toward lost Samarcand.

"Did you get hit in that business, general?" asked I, as the story ended.

"Indeed I did," replied the veteran, with a smile; "I was the only man wounded in my regiment, at least, if you can call it being 'wounded,' for I got my hurt not from any of the enemy's soldiers, but from a crazy old rascal of a dervish who came yelling out of a hole in the hillside, dashed a lump of mud right in my eye, snatched up a stone and knocked out two of my teeth with it, and then, after screaming and dancing about like a scalded cat, as if he meant to rout the whole Russian army single handed, changed his mind and ran back into his hole. And, for all I know, he may be there yet, for ourselves wouldn't touch him, saying that if all the Samarcandi (heathen) had fought like him, the Russians would not have seen Samarcand to-day."

Caution to Mothers.

Every mother is cautioned against giving her child laudanum or paregoric; it creates an unnatural craving for stimulants which kills the mind or the child. Acker's Baby Soother is specially prepared to benefit children and cure their pains. It is harmless and contains no Opium or Morphine. Sold by H. C. Hoberman & Co.

LONG LIFE

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject authenet thought until we receive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease-preventer that has yet been discovered, is simmered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

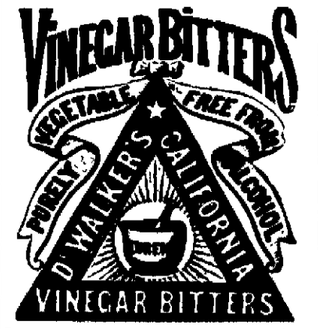

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them?

They do not know, of course, unless they have the courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why don't you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but a dollar for a very large bottle. Try it once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggist may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine, for it really is a mine—of health.

Free from alcohol and opium; composed of expensive herbs and roots, with a fine, delicate flavoring.

Huntington Herald. It is amusing to watch a certain class of citizens. They give as an excuse for not taking their town paper that they take several papers printed in other cities and really can't find the time to look at the town news, but just keep your eye on them after your local paper is published and you will find them skirmishing around trying to sponge their reading from some intelligent subscriber —Strange how the fashion in soda water changes as in everything else, remarks an exchange. Last summer it was all milk shake, and druggists and confectioners went to a great deal of expense fitting up milk shake mixers, and this season the once popular milk shake seems to have been given the grand shake. By the way, what has become of moxie, which less than a year ago was the best advertised article in the land, and promised to restore the lost virility of this land of the brave and home of the free?

12th Annual Bee Line Excursion.

At the urgent request of quite a number regular patrons, the Bee Line and Big Four will arrange for one of their popular, personally conducted Excursions to Kansas, Colorado, Salt Lake, Rocky Mountains and Pacific Coast, under the management of the experienced excursion agent, Mr. D Jay Colliver. In order to accommodate all and give ample time to prepare for a visit to the far west, Tuesday, July 20th, has been selected as the date leaving Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Dayton, Springfield and Indianapolis. Bee Line agents at each point named, will be provided with full instructions and can give full information regarding rates, routes, etc. Address them or D Jay Colliver, Bee Line Pass. Agt. 171 Superior street, Cleveland, O.

NOTE.—Ask any of our former patrons how the Bee Line takes care of their excursionists

Fell Into the Cistern.

PROSPECT, O., June 19.—This morning, while Mrs. Davis, an old lady, was drawing water from a cistern, the board on which she was standing broke, letting her down into the cistern. A neighbor saw her fall and secured aid immediately. When taken out she was unconscious. A physician was summoned, who says she was not seriously hurt, but, being quite old, the shock may be quite severe.

PUNISHMENT AT PROSPECT

The White Cap Chastisement as Seen When It Occurred.

[Prospect Monitor.]

Mrs. William Gabler has been ailing for some months with consumption—in fact, she has reached that stage in the dreaded disease when friends despair of recovery and only count the hours till the summons comes. She has been living with her husband on North street, until recently, but not receiving the proper care and attention, was taken to the home of her sister, Mrs. John Creeger, living two miles south of town.

Gabler's conduct, coupled with that of Sat Milligan, a woman of rather easy virtue, has been notorious for some time, but Sunday evening last it reached its climax. Before the rays of the sun had fallen in the west, he and Amos Simpson loaded the woman in question and a younger sister into a carriage and drove in the direction of Richwood. Parties who had been keeping them under shadow for some time, organized, about forty in number, and assembled at the river bridge to give them a warm reception on their return. Had the program been carried out, the four would have been whipped and ducked in the river, but the rain began pouring in torrents about 10 o'clock and drove the crowd back to town to seek shelter.

About 11 o'clock the carriage crossed the bridge and proceeded to the corner of Elm and Walnut streets opposite the township house, where the women were unloaded and made good their escape. At this juncture the crowd appeared and, after securing the team, took Gabler from the carriage and administered, according to reports, about twenty lashes and released him. Simpson was given a few lashes for being in bad company, and allowed to proceed with the team.

We must say for Mr. Gabler that he has for years been a resident of Prospect, and has always been counted an honest law-abiding citizen, one that has had no charges of this kind laid at his door until he fell a victim to this woman. We believe that no one more keenly feels his mistake than he does and that he will make amends for the future by living a better life. Every fair minded citizen will condemn this manner of meting out justice to evil doers, though it was one of these cases that could be reached in no other way.

Calesthenia

With our gas enterprise developed into a hole in the ground, the community is looking to railroad agitation. There is no great similarity in the two enterprises except as to certainty. In reality, there is some hope fulness for a new railroad. The engineers for the proposed Sandusky City and Columbus line have been here this week, and their presence has been the cause. The company is independent and asks nothing but right of way. The president of the proposed line says the road is sure to come, and its name is not Boom. If the road comes there is hope of getting the shop shore, from the natural advantages of the place. Aside from this however, a cross road here would be of untold advantage.

Mrs. John Rice, living just north of town and mother of Deputy Sheriff Rice, suffered a severe stroke of paralysis last Saturday, affecting her entire one side. This is the second affliction of this kind that she has suffered.

Dr. Stone has been confined to his bed for several days, but is improving.

The celebration of the Fourth it is hoped will attract many here. The program will be old-fashioned and a 'screaming' time will be had. The arrangements are being made with energy.

We have the base ball affection here, and a game now and then is the result. The boys do some good playing, and they figuratively wiped up the diamond with Galion and Marion clubs respectively on Tuesday and Thursday last.

We still have local option here in all its peculiarities, but we are now passing from the hard cider stage to the "foaming catholicon for spring fever and ennui." This is rumor, but well founded, and it is suggestive to remark that the borough is reaping no tax benefits whatever.

J. M. Blue has returned from Indiana with a bride, having been married at Kents Wednesday, June 12, to Miss Laura Ailes. Joe has been receiving the congratulations of his friends, and was treated to a "Serenade a la tin cannon," soon after his arrival. The newly wedded couple will make this their future home.
